THAMES FOYER

Often described as ‘the vibrant heart of the hotel’, the Thames Foyer was built into the centre of the original 1889 hotel building when The Savoy was extended in 1904. In this elegant room, diners first rose to dance to the music being played while they ate, thus inventing the dinner-dance; later a permanent dance floor was installed, and the world-renowned Savoy bands made their debuts in the Thames Foyer, as Tango teas and thés dansant became all the rage. The tradition of live music continues, as a pianist plays one of the hotel’s traditional pianos during Afternoon Tea.
The great glass cupola above you has restored the natural light which flooded into the Thames Foyer in those early days. Its restoration, completed in 2010, was inspired by an original design which was found in the hotel’s archive.
